

Dr Jim Gleeson was nominated to the Teaching Council by the Universities and named Third Level Colleges. Jim is a member of the Executive, Disciplinary and Education Committees. He has been working in initial and continuing teacher education for over twenty-five years and is currently a senior lecturer in Education at the University of Limerick. His professional interests include education and curriculum policy and research; curriculum development, change, evaluation and assessment; initial vocational education and training; school development and leadership. Jim enjoys collaborating with a range of educational practitioners and hearing other perspectives on education. He hopes that, by empowering teachers, the Council will have a very positive influence on the future of teaching and learning in Ireland. Originally from Drangan, Co. Tipperary, Jim is a graduate of NUIM and the University of East Anglia.
